

Electrical Discharge Reactors with Aqueous and Organic Liquids

Bruce R. Locke
Chemical and Biomedical Engineering Department Florida State University
e-mail: locke@eng.fsu.edu

Abstract— Electrical discharge plasma in contact with liquids is a rapidly increasing area of investigation due to interest for a wide range of applications from biomedical treatments to chemical and materials synthesis. This presentation will summarize the current status of work related to plasma contacting aqueous solutions and organic liquids with an emphasis on applications for chemical synthesis.